Overview

“Problems leading to academic dismissal often include wrong major; financial difficulties; too many outside work hours; an accident; illness of student or family members; the need for improved study skills, especially time management; and a failure to use campus resources.”- University of Maryland, Counseling Center

College can be a very challenging time for many students. Sometimes things don't go according to plan, and students can find themselves being asked to take some time off from their academic pursuits. In this interactive webinar, we will explore evidence-based best practices and strategies for helping students who have been academically dismissed return to school and complete their educational careers. We will discuss the challenges unique to this important population of students, together with proven strategies for enhancing their probability for ultimate success. It does, as they say, take a village. As such, we will look at how academic advisors can work with other campus community members to help them flourish once they return to campus. Included will be a discussion of effective and efficient programs and initiatives from across the nation that is currently being used to effectively and cost-efficiently meet the needs of these students - and how these programs and initiatives can be adapted to a variety of higher education environments. Equal emphasis will be placed on helping both individual students as well as the institutions that serve them to achieve their mutually complementary goal: persistence to graduation.

Objectives:

- Explore the reasons why students end up being academically dismissed
- Examine the academic and psychological factors that often set the stage for academic dismissal
- Investigate the different avenues for academic renewal; i.e., “clearing” the dismissed student’s academic record
- Discover how developing supportive relationships with dismissed student who are returning can be the key to their ultimate success
- Explain how academic advisors can work with other professionals across campus to maximize the potential for success once dismissed students return to campus
